

DOES AN AGREEMENT ON THE DIVISION OF ASSETS MADE IN CONTEMPLATION OF SEPARATION OVERRIDE THE LAW AS SET OUT IN THE WOMEN'S CHARTER?

Posted on March 1, 2013

Category: CNPupdates

General disclaimer

This article is provided to you for general information and should not be relied upon as legal advice. The editor and the contributing authors do not guarantee the accuracy of the contents and expressly disclaim any and all liability to any person in respect of the consequences of anything done or permitted to be done or omitted to be done wholly or partly in reliance upon the whole or any part of the contents.

Date Published: 1 March 2013

Author and Contributor: See Tow Soo Ling and Nazirah Din.

Introduction

The 2 main battlegrounds parties channel their resources towards in divorce proceedings relating to the matrimonial home and assets and the children (unless it is a childless marriage). Each will be battling for a piece of what they feel is rightly theirs. In general, pre-marriage assets, gifts and inheritances are not subject to division, unless the spouse claiming for a share of the same is able to show that there was substantial contribution made by them to these assets, by way of the maintenance or upkeep of those assets, or the spouses enjoyed the use of the assets together. The general principles which guide the court with regard to the division of matrimonial assets are provided for in S112 of the Women's Charter.

The Law

In defining what falls within the ambit of "matrimonial assets" the Courts must apply Section 112 (10) of the Women's Charter which states that:-

- "Any asset acquired before the marriage by one party or both parties to the marriage
 - Ordinarily used or enjoyed by both parties or one or more of their children while the parties are residing together for shelter; or
 - Transportation or for household, education, recreational, social or aesthetic purposes; or
 - Which has been substantially improved during the marriage by the other party or by both parties to the marriage; and
- Any other asset of any nature acquired during the marriage by one party or both parties to the marriage but does not include any asset (not being a matrimonial home) that has been acquired by one party at any time by gift or inheritance and that has not been substantially improved during the marriage by the other party or by both parties to the marriage."

Therefore in determining the final division of the matrimonial assets, the Courts will generally take into consideration the length of the marriage, the respective parties' direct financial, indirect financial and non-financial contributions towards the acquisition of these assets. It is pertinent to note that case law has established that in a short and childless marriage, the division of matrimonial assets will be made in accordance with the parties direct financial contributions, while the parties non-direct financial or non-financial contributions, will be taken as minimal.

Traditional Vs Broad-Brush Approach

In dealing with the division of matrimonial assets, the Courts used to adopt the traditional approach. The

General disclaimer

This article is provided to you for general information and should not be relied upon as legal advice. The editor and the contributing authors do not guarantee the accuracy of the contents and expressly disclaim any and all liability to any person in respect of the consequences of anything done or permitted to be done or omitted to be done wholly or partly in reliance upon the whole or any part of the contents.

traditional approach is where the Court considers the direct contributions made as a starting point before making adjustments to reflect the non-financial contribution of the parties. The broad-brush approach, on the other hand, takes into consideration the parties' direct and indirect financial contributions and aims to strike a balance between a just outcome in each case and the need to remain sensitive to the differences in each case.

What happens if upon separation but before the divorce, the parties agree as to how the assets are to be divided and they continue to accumulate, separately, more assets?

In the case of Lian Hwee Choo Phebe v Tan Seng Ong SGHC 255, parties were married with 4 adult children. Parties had an agreement with regards to the ownership and division of the matrimonial assets and to have no further community of assets between them, each party, having sole ownership of the divided assets and any other assets acquired subsequently. The Court found that even where there is no signed agreement setting out all the terms parties agreed on, this could still be implied from the course of conduct or dealing between parties or from correspondence or other relevant circumstances.

The agreement was enforceable and applicable to the issue of the division of the matrimonial assets. The Court ordered parties to respectively retain 100% share of their respective assets acquired after separation, in consideration of the agreement made. However, in the absence of an agreement, the next issue is what is the cut-off date for assets acquired after separation but before the actual divorce takes place?

The Court of Appeal in Yeo Chong Lin v Tay Ang Choo 2 SLR 1157 came to the conclusion that while there is no fixed date for the purposes of determining which assets would fall within the pool of matrimonial assets to be distributed, there were 4 possible operative dates:

- The date of separation;
- The date on which the petition of divorce is filed;
- The date on which a decree nisi is granted; or
- The date of hearing of ancillary matters.

The Court of Appeal then came to the conclusion that the operative date would either be the date of the decree nisi or the date of the hearing of the ancillary matter.

In cases where parties continued to amass assets during the course of their marriage even though they lived separately, the High Court, in Lee Siew Lin v Oh Choon SGHC 25, held that any accumulation of assets by the efforts of either party during separation would continue to fall into the pool of matrimonial assets. In that case, parties had been married for 18 years but the husband moved out after 6 years of marriage. There was also no child in the marriage. The High Court decided that parties would then be taken to have continued accumulating matrimonial assets jointly, on the basis that the marriage was still legally subsisting although they were separated. The Court, in this case, awarded the wife 26% share of the assets acquired after separation.

General disclaimer

This article is provided to you for general information and should not be relied upon as legal advice. The editor and the contributing authors do not guarantee the accuracy of the contents and expressly disclaim any and all liability to any person in respect of the consequences of anything done or permitted to be done or omitted to be done wholly or partly in reliance upon the whole or any part of the contents.

Conclusion

These three cases clarify the issue of assets acquired post-separation and before the divorce. Assets amassed or acquired after parties to marriage separate fall into the pool of assets to be distributed so long as it was acquired before the day the Court hears these issues unless the parties came to an agreement, whether verbal or in writing, which sets out and defines their shares and rights to such assets.

General disclaimer

This article is provided to you for general information and should not be relied upon as legal advice. The editor and the contributing authors do not guarantee the accuracy of the contents and expressly disclaim any and all liability to any person in respect of the consequences of anything done or permitted to be done or omitted to be done wholly or partly in reliance upon the whole or any part of the contents.