

Our Practice

Our Technology Law Practice Group offers comprehensive legal services in the areas of traditional information and communications technology (ICT) law, e-commerce law, data protection and privacy law, telecommunications law, ICT-related regulatory and compliance issues, as well as new media law.

In relation to traditional ICT law, we advise our clients on all aspects of law relating to the use of technology in business, including the supply and procurement of technology-related products and services, as well as the commercial exploitation of technology-related assets, including through licensing & technology-transfer arrangements, mergers & acquisitions, joint ventures and private equity transactions. We also advise on contentious ICT-related issues.

In the areas of e-commerce and new media law, we advise on all aspects of law relating to the establishment and operation of e-commerce related businesses, content and application service provider arrangements, as well as animation and movie production, financing, distribution and broadcasting agreements.

Drawing on the firm's strength in the area of corporate finance, we are able to provide our ICT and new media clients with a comprehensive service extending to advice on ICT-related acquisitions and disposals, equity and debt capital market transactions, as well as securities law and corporate governance issues.

Our clients come from a wide range of industry sectors, including the public sector, telecommunications, financial services, healthcare, education, logistics, manufacturing, retail, media, travel, leisure and entertainment. We also provide legal expertise to technology suppliers, including strategic consultants, systems integrators, software solution providers, ICT-infrastructure providers and providers of managed services providers.
